How This Report Came To Be

This report started with a Skype conversation between Joe Finn and I. Paul Clifford has just released an Exact Match Domain (EMD) finder tool, and it prompted me to do some research on EMDs.

I had heard that EMDs were losing their hold in the SERPs. Less than a year ago, Aaron Wall of seobook.com wrote a lengthy blog post in which he cites Matt Cutts (Google's chief spammy site hunter) as saying that brand domain names—not keyword-based domain names—were getting the boost or benefit in the SERPs.

But on the other hand, SEOmoz reported in their first blog post of 2012 that EMDs "seemed to be ranking better and appearing in greater number."

So who was right? What was the truth about EMDs?

To see for ourselves, Joe and I made a list of various niche topics. We then ran over to Google's Keyword Tool, threw the root niche keyword in (for example, fertility) and then randomly grabbed a long tail phrase that had at least 3 words in the phrase. We also wanted at least 1,000 exact monthly search results (although we used a couple with less than that).

Armed with our list of long tail phrases, it became a matter of plugging the phrases into Google to see what came back.

What follows are those results and our analysis. Some of our findings completely took us by surprise! Others reinforced the years of SEO best practices Joe and I (and hopefully you) already apply on a regular basis.

Along the way, we'll share our insights and opinions on the results, as well as a couple of tips that should serve you well going forward.

NOTE: This is not a "niche report." The niches we used are completely random (although we tried to target popular niches). Our use of these niches is not an endorsement, nor are we saying to go into or stay out of any particular niches.

It may be strange at first—especially if you focus on the actual niche rather than the data points—but we encourage you to really look at the results. See if you can find additional patterns within all the chaos. Try to see how Google is making heads or tails of sites and their content pages.

We have focused on only a few core factors (or else this would be a 300-page report!). We've spent over 40 hours, and at some point, it was impossible to do a complete competitive analysis on each of the 750 websites that came back in the SERPs.

Compare the trends and averages you see to the strategies you currently employ. You will be looking at 750 pages that have succeeded in breaking the first page of Google, most for very popular monthly searches.

Above all else, be a thinker and experimenter. As an online marketer, you must be willing to process and analyze on your own. If you're waiting for someone to tell you everything, you're assured to be the last to know.

We hope this information finds you well and on your way to great prosperity. If this report helps you make smarter, better-informed decisions in your marketing efforts, then we have succeeded in our mission.

All best!

Bill Guthrie

Joe Finn

Reading the Results

Here's what we focused on within the Top 10 (first page of Google) results.

- Number of EMDs in the Top 10 for each long tail phrase
- Number of Top 10 results using the exact phrase allintitle
- Number of Top 10 results using the exact phrase allinurl
- The breakdown of the types of domains in the Top 10
- The status of the .com EMD
- Use use of the exact phrase and keywords in the text snippets
- Noted any "results hogs," or those big sites that creep up everywhere
- Any additional commentary that jumped out at us (didn't always happen)

Each page has two sections: On the left hand side is a screenshot of the Top 10 results. On the right hand side is additional data points.

BLUE ARROWS = use of the exact phrase in the title (allintitle)

ORANGE ARROWS = use of the exact phrase in the url (allinurl)

RED CIRCLES = a EMD of the targeted long tail phrase

ORANGE CIRCLES = a damn close EMD (you'll see what we mean)

After the keyword phrase, you'll see the exact search results for that phrase.

Next, we give you the number of EMDs, allintitle results, and allinurl results for the phrase. The way you get your own allintitle or allinurl results is like this:

allintitle:"acupuncture for fertility"

Notice, there's no space between the colon and the opening quote. Use quotes for the exact phrase. Remove quotes for a broad match. Same thing applies for allinurl.

Here's an excellent resource for all types of cool searches you can perform:

http://www.googleguide.com/advanced_operators.html

After all that, you'll see information that looks like this:

Allintitle: 14,300 (956)

Allinurl: 10,500 (766)

The numbers in parenthesis are the actual number of results Google will show for any given search. The number will never exceed 1,000.

If this is unfamiliar to you, you're probably thinking, "What do you mean? It says 14,300 and now you're telling me it's only 956? Where did the other 13,344 results go?"

Well, as is always the case with the search engines, they keep all their best secrets safe, so we can only use our brains and experience to determine what's up.

- Due to their desire to deliver results as fast as they do, Google limits their results to 1,000 (the same applies with a keyword tool that taps into Google's API).
- With a maximum of 1,000 results to show searchers, Google has very sophisticated duplication filters in place. They instantly weed out whatever they deem as duplicate content (this could be hundreds or thousands of versions of a press release, duplicate versions of a product description, or unedited PLR, just to name a few examples).
- They will also suppress—in many instances—multiple pages from a single site (although we found several times that was not the case).

So looking back at the figures above, another way to look at those results is like this:

Of 14,300 pages using //long tail phrase// in the page title, Google deemed 956 pages worthy of consideration to its searchers. And of 10,500 pages using //long tail phrase// in the URL (either as the root domain or in some naming convention), Google deemed only 766 pages worthy of consideration to its searchers.

I don't know about you, but I LOVE those odds! It's depressing when you think you're trying to compete with tens of thousands, or oftentimes, tens or hundreds of millions of pages for a Top 10 spot.

NOTE: If you'd like to get at these "true" numbers for any search, go into your Google search settings (the little cogged wheel in the top right corner of a Google search page), turn off "Google Instant predictions," and increase the "Results per page" to 100. Hit save. Here's a screen shot of what to do:

Then once you're back in Google, scroll to the very bottom of the page, and click on the page "10" link.

Then scroll down to the bottom of that page, and look for this:

In order to show you the most relevant results, we have omitted some entries very similar to the 917 already displayed.
If you like, you can repeat the search with the omitted results included.

In this example, 917 is the number of results that Google will show without additional prompting to show its omitted results.

Some things to Watch For

Brands vs. Keyword Domains

We couldn't figure out how to accurately display the number of branded domain versus keyword domains, because it's not an exact thing. Who's to say that mybloodsugarlevels.com isn't a worthy brand, even though it appears for the long tail phrase "blood sugar levels."

Even a novice marketer (and most average searchers) can spot a keyword-stuffed domain name. However, that's not to say that those domains haven't established a brand presence around their site.

So it's tricky, and unscientific. (I bet Google is struggling with the same thoughts.) But what we'll say is this: NOT having a keyword domain (or even better, and EMD) does not seem to hurt a site's rankings.

More often than not, the Top 10 results are not EMDs or keyword domains. Keep your eye on this, and take note of the absence of the exact keyword in the root domains.

So, don't despair if the EMD or keyword domain isn't available. You can build a brand presence, starting with an interesting domain name, and focus on other types of SEO tactics.

Furthermore, the issue of "power of EMDs" was hard to discern for this reason:

Of the 75 long tails we analyzed, 53 of the .com versions of the exact match domain were parked and none of those 53 ranked in the Top 10 results. By "parked," we mean that they hosted no real content at all and had little or no additional SEO efforts going into them. In short, these are likely owned by "domain squatters" waiting to get paid.

Of the 22 remaining .com EMDs, 6 were visible in the various Top 10 results, 15 were active but not in the Top 10 for their exact phrase, and 1 was a redirect to another site.

So what does that tell us?

It tells us that EMDs are currently alive and well, if handled properly. Throughout the 75 niches we covered, there were various modified EMDs thriving in the Top 10, and, as we just stated, 6 pure EMDs.

What of the other 15, the EMDs that weren't showing in the Top 10? We didn't go any deeper, but we'll say this much: any phrase worth competing for (one with good monthly traffic, say, over 5,000 broad) will not be dominated just because you grabbed the EMD.

The Power of Plurals

Although we didn't show the results, in most cases, we checked the opposing results for singular and plural versions of a long tail phrase. In other words, if we were analyzing a singular long tail, we checked the plural version as well to see if the results were different. These are noted in what we called a "Plural Alert."

And what did we find?

The singular versus plural of every long tail we checked did show some version of different results. In some cases, the results weren't extreme (just a minimal reordering of the same results), but in many cases, we found completely new pages in the Top 10, or a radical reordering of results (like going from the 1 spot to the 8 spot).

So as you target keywords, make sure to remember the power of plurals... and singulars! (In fact, plurals have less competition!)

Niches Matter

Some niches, such as specific medical conditions, lend themselves to particular authority sites (.gov, .edu, real .orgs). And some long tails are completely dominated by on and offline retailers. We ran into both quite a few times.

Don't Forget your Snippets

The text snippet is the explanatory text that Google shows just after the links. As you review, notice how these top performers use the targeted long tail phrase in their snippets.

This is especially significant when you consider that allintitle and allinurl is not used by all of these pages. But the snippets...well, they all seem to show relevance to the phrase. (It's easy to spot...just look for the bold-faced words. That's Google showing us the keyword relevancy.)

Latent Semantic Indexing (LSI) and Google's Thesaurus

The dummy definition of LSI is Google's ability to detect synonyms. The words "presents" and "gifts" mean the same thing. But "presents" could also mean "to present." Follow? So the Google bots look for additional clues within the text to see what "presents" means. When connected with words like "birthday" or "anniversary," it's clear what the semantics of the phrasing means.

As you target keywords, consider the possible (and logical) synonyms of the phrase. "Techniques" and "tips" are interchangeable, right? Google thinks so.

We found many instances where the semantic variation of keyword ranked just as high as the exact long tail itself.

Yeah, Yeah, But Isn't it All About Links?

The short answer is "No." Although we don't show link analysis on 750 pages (you'll forgive us for that, won't you?), we saw time and again that the page with the most links did not always win.

Link building—the way Google wants it—is a natural, organic process of other sites and web users finding your content and considering it valuable and relevant enough to link to it.

These links, in Google's eyes, are like a vote in your favor.

Google knows that sites use link spamming techniques, so they just train their robots to understand the relevancy of the links coming into our pages.

Relevant links—links from relevant and related sites—seem to give sites an extra boost in the SERPs. While Google is essentially phasing out its own PageRank system, it's strengthening its ability to discern related content and natural link building.

One Last Thing

If you're still struggling with proper site mechanics and SEO, consider checking out Bill's Niche TuneUp WSO. Don't be alarmed that it's a few months old. The information within will help you fix up existing sites or start brand new ones the right way.

Now onto the Long Tails!

PLURAL ALERT!

While we went with the plural "remedies" here, the singular "remedy" kept the top 3 in place, but after that, it's basically a whole different list of results. Interest to find that the plural 7 spot—very close to an EMD, didn't stick in the singular results.

Additional Thoughts:

Notice the Search Plus Your World personal results coming in. And Google's Stores and Brands recommendations at the top rather than the bottom.

Additional Thoughts: Kind of a strange phrase, but since it had good exact results, thought we'd see what happened. The 2 and 3 spots belong to authority news sites, but the content isn't exactly new. The 6 spot is hyphenated, and it's a Dallas result which could be pulling due to my location. Notice the #1 spot is the only one that used the exact phrase in their snippet. And see how Google semantically indexed "fast" and "quickly," "sell" and "selling."

The Data

The use of the long tail allintitle appears over 3 times as much as allinurl, leading us to believe it is a stronger indicator to Google of the content and purpose of a particular page. Make sure you're adding your targeted keyword phrase in your title. And while you're at it, also add to your url (it never hurts to be thorough).

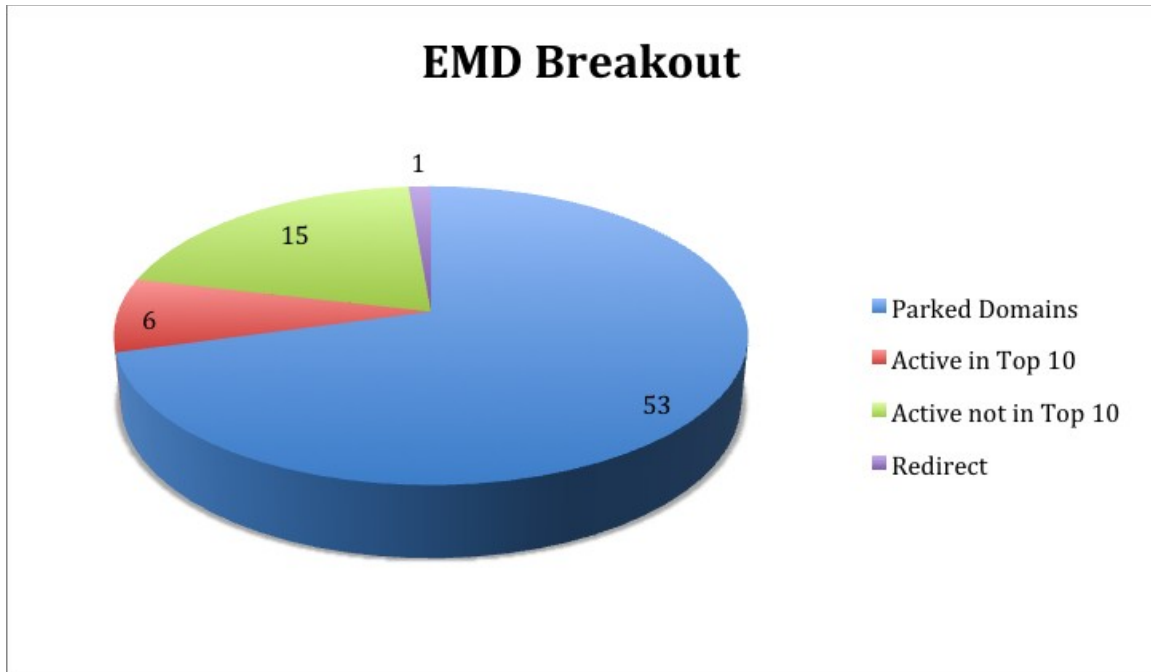

EMDs represented over 7% of all Top 10 results, but given the number of domain squatters out there—those who have purchased a domain but appear to be waiting on someone to purchase it from them (and therefore are not actually creating a site on the domain)—the overall data would suggest that the use of EMDs is still an excellent strategy for boosting rankings in the SERPs.

Domain Types

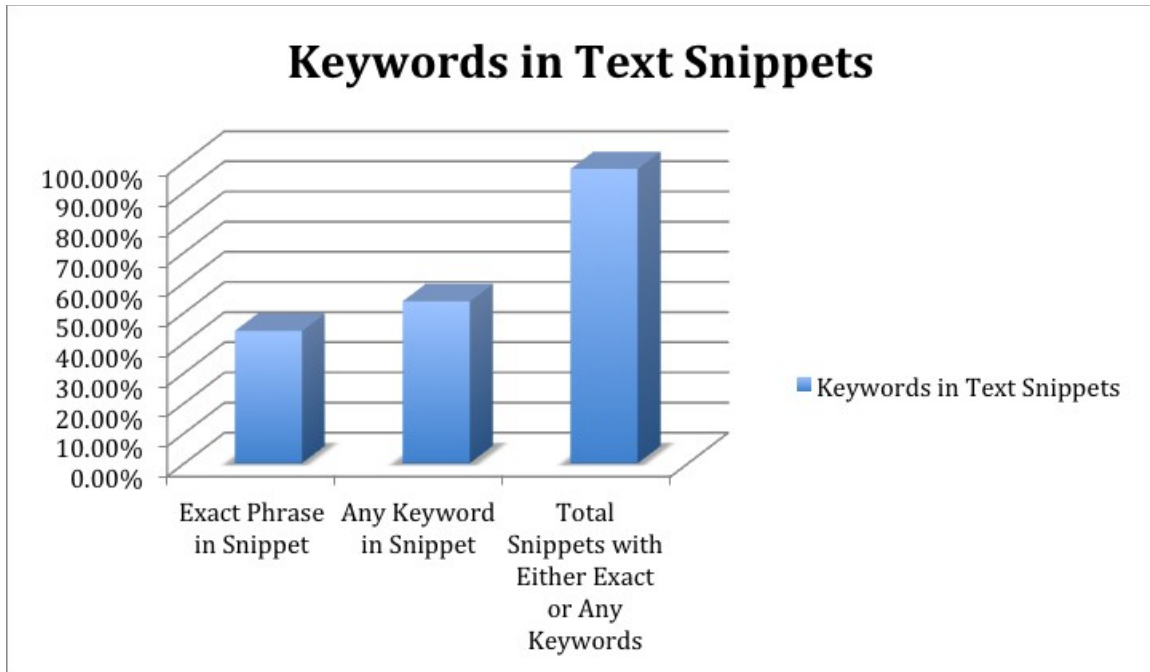

This one may not come as a big surprise. The prevailing domains are .com addresses. 85.5% of Top 10 results were .com's. The runner-up was .org addresses, and scanning the results, we see marketers using the .org's as much or more than actual organizations. So if the .com domain isn't available, it looks favorable to go with the .org.

Hyphenated domains made up 5.3% of the overall domains in the Top 10. Years ago, it was recommended to use hyphenated domains, but that practice seems to have disappeared. The data would suggest that if you're going to target an EMD, a hyphenated domain still has ranking power.

The data associated with this pie chart can be interpreted a number of ways. Of the 21 active EMD domains in these long tails, only a third of them are ranking in the Top 10. So does that say that EMDs don't work? We don't think so.

We speculate that the 15 active domains not ranking in the Top 10 are lousy at SEO, or in some cases, are being used by a local business and therefore were suppressed to Bill's searched from his home computer in Dallas.

The prevailing factor that connects the top performers in the 75 long tails we explored was the use of keywords in the text snippets. Also known as meta tags or meta descriptions, this information is important to human searchers, so they can get a good sense (or quick preview) of what they can expect should they visit a page. Clearly, Google also uses these text snippets to better understand what a particular page is about.

97.6% of all of the Top 10 results use as least one relevant keyword in their meta description: 43.9% used the exact long tail; 53.7% used some of the keywords or a semantic equivalent.
